Antje Nieuwenhuizen

In an interview recorded on 31 May 1980, Antje Nieuwenhuizen and her daughter Grietje reminisce with LIMM Librarian Ruth Dougherty about emigrating from Holland to the largely Dutch community of West Sayville. Antje's husband, Adrian, was already living here when, in April 1926, she and their three young children (John, Grietje and Gerrit) left Ymuiden and sailed to Hoboken aboard the Rotterdam.

Just as 't Lange Eylandt of Adriaen Block became Long Island, eventually Nieuwenhuizen was Americanized into Newhouse — a well-known family name in the West Sayville/Sayville area.

A Newhouse family photo showing the traditional cap with oorijzer — "ear iron" — the headpiece or helmet used to support the cap. Originally made of iron, they were eventually crafted of more precious metals and came to signify the wearer's wealth and age.

"If the family could afford it, girls received a modest version of the headgear at about age twelve. At sixteen, or at marriage, a woman would have her formal gold helmet. In most villages throughout the Netherlands women wore some sort of lace cap with stiffly starched angles, augmented by gold or silver ornaments and various sorts of jewelry illustrating familial wealth."
