

Interview with Arne Ole Andersen

Narrator: Arne Ole Andersen

Interviewer: Millie Rahn

Location: New Bedford, MA

Date of Interview: November 9, 2006

Project Name: The Working Waterfront Festival Community Documentation Project

Project Description: This project documents the history and culture of the commercial fishing industry and other port trades. The project began in 2004 in conjunction with the Working Waterfront Festival, an annual, educational celebration of commercial fishing culture which takes place in New Bedford, MA. Interviewees have included a wide range of individuals connected to the commercial fishing industry and/or other aspects of the port through work or familial ties. While the majority of interviewees are from the port of New Bedford, the project has also documented numerous individuals from other ports around the country. Folklorist and Festival Director Laura Orleans and Community Scholar and Associate Director Kirsten Bendiksen are project leaders. The original recordings reside at the National Council for the Traditional Arts in Maryland with listening copies housed at the Festival's New Bedford office.

Abstract

On November 9, 2006 Millie Rahn interviewed Arne Ole Andersen as part of the Working Waterfront Festival Documentation Project. Arne shares memories from his childhood growing up in a fishing and farming village in Denmark. He began his maritime career at fourteen, working on Baltic traders and later on larger ships, including Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish vessels. He sailed on American ships during the Korean War and settled in New Bedford, where he fished primarily out of the port. Throughout his career, Andersen faced various challenges, including shipwrecks and adverse weather conditions. Arne discusses the impact of modern technology on the fishing industry, his concerns about overfishing, as well as his views on the effects of global warming and corruption in the industry.

Millie Rahn: Yeah... so I'll ask you some questions, but feel free to, you know... things that I hadn't thought of. Let's start. Today is Thursday, November 9, 2006, and I'm here in... my name is Millie Rahn, and I'm a folklorist with the Working Waterfront Oral History Project, and I'm here in Fairhaven at the home of Ole Andersen, and Kirsten Bendiksen is here also as part of the interview, taking care of all the technical support. So...Mr. Andersen, tell me a little bit about when and where you were born, and... how you came to end up fishing in New Bedford.

Ole Andersen: Well I was born 1929 in Denmark. I was born and – and adopted out. I spent about fourteen years on a dairy farm and a fishing village. So I went out fishing – farming was never my... my... that was not my, what is it you say?

MR: Your forte or your favorite thing to do?

OA: No, that was not my favorite thing.

MR: Yup. [01:45]

OA: But I did grow up with a lot of animals and things. When I was fourteen I went to sea. And that in what they called Baltic traders. That was wooden, that was schooners and ketches and things we sailed to Norway, Germany, Sweden, Finland. There was a war going on, Denmark was occupied by Germany. So you were limited at...

MR: Oh right... Right. That was during the war.

OA: Yes. Then after the war, when the war was over, I went in bigger ships, big motor ships, freighters... and 1947, I came to United States first time...I sailed in Danish and Norwegian ships, one Swede, and then the Korean War broke out. And when that Korean War broke out there was a shortage of seamen in United States. So I went out, up and got my seamen's paper, and then I sailed in American ships. Mostly ammunition ships to Korea. But also some coal ships to Europe. I was on a Liberty ship. We was out on the same time as this Captain Carls, with his Flying Enterprise. I don't know if you know anything about that... no.

MR: I don't...

OE: No, that was I. [Eisbansen's?] line, that was.... Lands End of England, we were anchored there and she had a terrible, terrible lift and everybody left except that Captain Carls and there was a big thing there.

KB: Can I just check something here before we go any further. Does this look right to you?

MR: Mmm hmm.

KB: Okay.

MR: Are you getting it through the headphones?

KB: Yeah, yeah.

MR: Yeah, its, it...

KB: I didn't know if I had it backwards, the tape

MR: No, no that's right, that's right

KB: It looks right

MR: If it's backwards it wouldn't work, you know, it would...

KB: Okay, it wouldn't work.

MR: Yeah. So... [04:33]

OE: We got underway, we had two anchors out, and that ship, it was really a good crew. The captain was Norwegian, and there was a Danish engineer... that's all I remember. But we had horrible weather. We couldn't keep the propeller underwater, we were on ballast, empty. We towed a load of coal to France. And empty back, we were headed for Jacksonville. Ha... they put water in the hold, the after hold to keep her down, and, heh, well it helped some but not enough. All of a sudden there was a rumble, a big rumble and the propeller fell off. Heh.

MR: Ooh...

OE: We were halfway between Portugal and the Azores. So we drifted two, three days, and a big Dutch towboat took us into St. Michael, the Azores. We had a spare propeller, they put that on. And then we went back to Jacksonville.

MR: Hmm.

KB: Wow, and you were fourteen?

OE: No, I was older then. I was probably...

MR: This was during the Korean War...

OE: Seventeen, eighteen then...

KB: Eighteen...

MR: And what was your job on these boats?

OE: I was on deck.

MR: You were on deck, okay. And on the earlier boats as well, the Baltic...?

OE: No, you were everything, these sailboats there, you were everything, cook, and you were everything. You were everything. Heh heh.

MR: Mmm... So is that how you decided then to stay in the States?

OE: Then I... from one ship to another I'm... then I went and got my visa so I was legal year so that took a couple of years, but at that time it was very easy, there was open quota from Denmark, so I went up to a consulate in Peru, in Lima, Peru, and, uh, put in an application for visa.

MR: In Lima, Peru. That's amazing.

OE: Yes. [07:18]

MR: Now you were showing me a certificate here, um, from the Coast Guard, certificate of discharge on October 10, 1957.

OE: Yes...

MR: A shipwreck? Could you tell me more about this?

OE: Well, just went up on a reef. That's all. And she didn't get off. Then she slid off afterwards and sunk. And in fact I have some picture of that. Where we on the lifeboats.

MR: Wow...

OE: It took awhile, and then finally a Navy towboat came out, but it was too late. She was gone, so they towed us off and towed us into Hawaii.

MR: Hawaii... Wow. Did you have other close calls like that?

OE: Well, yes. I was in a fishing boat here named Lynn. That was Leif Tolafson. We were out, way out, too far out, we shouldn't even be that – it was a small, she was only 54 – she was built as a lobster smack. She had water all midship section, it was a well, big well to get lobsters. But... the hatch back aft came off. It was pretty bad weather. But lucky enough we found out what it was and made it into Block Island.

MR: So, what were some of the – what kind of fishing were you doing... most of your days?

OE: Well, done all kind of fishing, ground fishing, haddock, cod fish, yellow tail, flounders, and... then I was swordfishing, the Chilmark sword, longlining... that time there was so many swordfish that the boat was full.

MR: Wow...

OE: Yes. Now there's not one. I talked to some guys over on Menemsha, they went out, they didn't catch any, I think, this year. Last year they get two swordfish.

MR: Hmm...

OE: That's how bad it is.

KB: Huh!

MR: When did you stop fishing? Have you stopped fishing?

OE: I stopped fishing... Lets see now... about ten years ago.

MR: Mmm... and were you mostly fishing out of New Bedford then?

OE: Yeah. [10:40]

MR: So how did you end up getting – how did you come from Denmark in all of your travels and make it to New Bedford?

OE: Well, like, on that ship there where we shipwrecked, we traveled from Hawaii, and then I went out in New York. There were scallopers out of New York then. Out of [Ulma?] Park. And I get [inaudible]. Shucker. But there was heavy drinking there them days, I suppose today too. Then cook didn't show up so then I got the cook job. And they were going... they usually fish down off New York, but we went to Georges. There was also Lief. Then we come into New Bedford, and I said to myself I'd better stay here. And a lot of Norwegians. Oh my God there was Norwegians all over Purchase Street in their sweaters, you could tell em, you know. And, you know, New Bedford ships to play was a good place to operate out of, [Grumfield?], Rasmussen, Sally, you know, what a site. They knew everything. That was, you know, that was really wonderful here then.

MR: Mmm....

OE: There was a Norwegian bakery here... there was another things.

MR: When was that, do you know? Was that in the....

OE: That was 1950. In the 50s.

MR: Okay.

OE: That's... date, you have to go by the date there.

MR: So it was after 1957, okay.

OE: Yeah.

MR: Were there many (ahem), were there many other Danes here?

OE: Uh, maybe a dozen.

MR: So not many...

OE: No, not compared – Norwegian was the major...Norwegian and Newfoundlanders.

MR: Mmm... So were most of your crews made up of both Norwegians and Newfoundlanders? [12:59]

OE: Well, there was two Swedes and there was some Finns and... but the majority was Norwegian, I was a boat where we were all Norwegian, the last boat I was on. Then I had my own boat after that, and the last one I was on was the [Paulinates?] after seven years. There was strictly Norwegians. Then them boats them days, there was no place in the world like you had in these boats. Especially a Norwegian boat, because they like to eat fish, see? We ate fish right off the deck.

MR: Wow...

OE: Cooked fish, sometimes, midnight. Cooked lobsters, and codfish heads, and big feast.

KB: Ha ha.

OE: Yes! But of course there was other nationality didn't like that, you know, all this fish. But I was right in heaven. Heh, heh, heh.

MR: I always ask fishermen if they eat fish because some say yes and others say no they – they'll eat anything but.

OE: Scandanavian does. And New Foundland, but Newfoundlanders they like to have salt fish.

MR: Right... Yeah, I lived in New Foundland for awhile... salt fish was a... a bit...

OE: Yes. I was up in New Foundland.

MR: Yeah?

OE: Yeah. Five, six years ago, me and my wife, we drove up there.

MR: Where did you go?

OE: Up to, uh, St. Anthony.

MR: Oh yes.

OE: Way up.

MR: Yes, right. On the Labrador Straights.

OE: Yes, and we went over to Labrador. And some meadow there, there's a Viking museum there.

MR: Oh, right. Yes.

OE: I'd like to go back again, then I'd go over to St. John for... that's a long haul too.

MR: Yes. Especially from St. Anthony.

OE: Oh yeah.

MR: That's where I was, St. Anthony.

OE: No, yeah, but if you take the ferry from North Sydney over to...

MR: Argentia.

OE: No, no, no.

MR: Port aux Basques?

OE: Port aux Basques.

MR: Oh yeah. And then it's still a long trip.

OE: Oh yes. About five hundred miles. New Foundland is big.

MR: It is.

OE: Oh yes.

MR: There's nothing in between except...

OE: It was funny... we drove up, and... crossed in Calais when you go into New Brunswick. So the Canadian guy said, "How long are you going to be away, you gone?" And I said, "Well, I gonna keep on going until I can get salt codfish", and he said, "Then you gotta go to New Foundland." Heh heh heh.

MR: Yup.

OE: There, we had it every morning, for breakfast. And they drowned it in butter, so I said you gotta keep the butter on the side, there's too much butter. [laughs]

MR: [laughing] The salt and the butter, it's amazing that anybody lives past thirty or so...

OE: I know, you'd think their arteries would be all clogged up.

MR: Yeah, well they're not the healthiest people around.

OE: No.

MR: No.

OE: But they do that in Norway too.

KB: Yeah.

OE: Oh yeah, but in Northern Norway, [Loufou?]

KB: Oh yeah

OE: Up there, their salted codfish is...

KB: Oh yeah, yeah... right. [16:23]

MR: Where is there furthest you did any fishing away from New Bedford?

OE: Oh, I don't know. Two-three hundred miles out. Northern edge. Or maybe down off Cape May. We were down there fluking.

MR: What is fluking?

OE: Fluke, that's a big flat fish. Sometime in the winter you go – you would go there for them. They come up here in the summer too.

MR: So working with all those Newfoundlanders and Norwegians, were there any superstitions or beliefs that people had or practiced?

OE: Oh yes, very seriously.

MR: Yeah.

OE: Like the Norwegians... the Norwegians not so much but the Newfoundlanders, like you had big boats like Nautilus and there was twelve men, bug groundfish boat, and these Newfoundlanders they lived down New York or Long Island, and when they came up here they were dressed in ties, hats, overcoat. Oh yes, they were very gentleman, and as soon as they get on the boat they would change their clothes, but their oilers on, and they working the net, and they would go out if there was a gale of wind, that [Laird?], he would go out and lay off No Man's. Well, there was superstition, like you didn't talk about pigs, you never mentioned that word, you didn't flip the hatches upside down, and they didn't like yellow oilers either.

KB: I was gonna bring that up with the list, yeah.

OE: They didn't like that.

KB: Yeah...

MR: So that was...why yellow oilers? I hadn't heard that one before.

OE: That's a good question. Then a guy, he had bought a radio over New Bedford ship supply. They sold some Norwegian radios, and you could get the fish news way down Georges. So these – these Newfoundlanders, they're sitting looking at that, that was hanging up, so one Newfie he says, "What is that crazy Jesus thing there?" And another said, "That might be an antique Christ thing." [laughs] Yeah, they were unbelievable.

MR: Interesting, interesting.

OE: If you were Protestant, you know... like, they looked at me, you know. "You a Black Protestant ain't you?" I said "No, I'm not a Protestant, I don't go to no church, I got nothing to do with that." [laughs]... Yes, but overall they were good people. Good family people. They were a little heavy in the drinking too, you know, but they were good people.

MR: Yeah, hard work...

OE: And so was these old Norwegians. They were good people. [19:59]

MR: What do you think about fishing today? How does it compare to...

OE: Oh, I don't know...

MR: ...the old days?

OE: ...I never been out in these new boats.

MR: Mmm...

OE: I never been on a steel boat.

MR: Mmmm....

OE: I wouldn't know...

MR: So you always on wooden boats.

OE: Yes.

MR: Was it a good life for you?

OE: Yeah, I think so.

MR: Would you do it again?

OE: No, I don't think so. I might pursue something else. Tow boating, and things like that. But, uh, it was not bad. If you were on a good boat you were all set.... You see, I was telling you, I remember when young Caroline used to sit down Fort Phoenix and I think there was CB radios they had that time, and then Lilian B be going out, see that boat radar and Ulu was there, and they had some guys going skipper.

KB: Yeah, Lilian B, that was a long time ago.

OE: Yes.

KB: (laughs) That's a long time ago!

OE: I think she wind up down Long Island and I think sunk.

KB: I don't think she sunk, I think they're using her for something else.

OE: Oh, they are?

KB: Yeah. You should ask Frida, yeah.

OE: Huh.

MR: What do you think makes a good fisherman? Or, made a good fisherman when you were... out there?

OE: Well, if you didn't drink and you were there on time, and you learned a few things, you, like, good at mending twine and things like that. And... there was some good men. There was trouble, make a stew, you know...

MR: Mmm hmm...

OE: But... there- there was good men.

MR: What were some of the best skills that you had that you learned?

OE: Well, splice wire and spliced rope, and... I can sew canvas too... things. In a boat you gotta be able to do a little of everything.

MR: Mmm...If someone was starting out today, what kind of advice would you give them?

OE: Well, you... I only know what you know, like the paper.

MR: Mmm-hmm.

OE: It was in the paper here that fifty years from now there be no fish.

KB: Yeah, that's not so, though.

OE: Well, that's what somebody says, but you see I look at the paper and the trips come in, that's – there sure ain't much fish. And now I come from Denmark, like [Espier?] there used to be a thousand boats out there. Today there might be fifty or...

MR: Mmm.

OE: That's the whole of Denmark, they've cut the fleet right out.

KB: Mmm.

OE: And the only place that there's any fish that's way up Northern Norway up there, Barent Sea and up there. And there's no fish in New Foundland. There's no fish in Nova Scotia to speak of. So it's going to hit – there's no fish here like it used to be. Oh, that's so far off, it's unbelievable. [23:57]

MR: Yeah, I was gonna ask what you thought the future of the fishery is.

OE: I think it looks very grim. But I could be wrong, I'm not a scientist.

KB: I know a lot of the fishermen are sayin' there's just as much fish out there now as there was in the sixties. They're throwing twenty-five thousand pounds of codfish over the side.

OE: Could be. I don't know.

KB: Sorry... sorry...

OE: I don't know. I don't know. But I know they're not bringing in the amount of fish.

KB: Yeah, but that's because they're not – they cant go where the fish is, and they're only allowed to bring in so much. So when they say the landings are down...

OE: But, you see...

KB: ...they can't bring it in, its not 'cause...

OE: ... you see, this fleet you have today, with all that horsepower compared to what you used to have...

KB: Oh yeah.

OE: ...or the navigation system, and the nets. It's a completely different ballgame than it was... thirty years, forty years ago.

KB: Oh yeah, technology, sure.

OE: That technology, that's – that will kill you. That's the same that you start hunting deer from a helicopter.

KB: Hmm...

OE: It's too modern. It's too modern. There – there's no way the fish cannot compete with that.

KB: Mmmm....

OE: But maybe I'm wrong, I have no idea.

KB: Yeah. 'Course now they're making like haddock, like, separators, and they're making, you know, nets...

OE: Yeah, well, I don't know.

KB: Mmm.

OE: I don't know nothing.

KB: Mmm, yeah.

OE: I can only say this, that you don't see this thousand pound of fish, there was days there was thousand pound of fish here in New Bedford, and up in Boston, when I come on, there was eighty bean trawlers. I was in a couple of them too. And they brought in two, three hundred thousand.

MR: Mmm.

KB: Mmm.

OE: Haddock. That's what they wanted in Boston. But that's... all of a sudden they couldn't get trips and nobody would build no new boats up there because of...it just fizzled out. Now there's not one boat in Boston. Well, there's few regular draggers, but.... But that's to get wiped out. I don't know. I really, I couldn't, I would, I would...

KB: Mm. You musta been out some awful storms, huh?

OE: Well, everybody have.

MR: But were, do you have any, do you have any that stand out in your memory, or close calls, or... besides a shipwreck.

OE: Well, I was out in a hurricane, the Mary Tappa. Heh heh. I slept right through.

KB: Oh no!

OE: Yes.

KB: What hurricane was that?

OE: I don't remember.

KB: Maybe the '54. No?

OE: No...that one here didn't go... she was just out – offshore.

KB: The one you were in?

OE: Yes.

KB: Oh, oh.

MR: Mmm.

OE: She only lasted couple hours.

KB: Aah.

MR: Hmm. [27:20]

OE: That same, there's a lot of scallops around. And lot of money being made scalloping. But the scalloping not going to last. Scalloping comes and...comes and goes.

KB: Mmm hmm. Mmm...

OE: You know, there was so bad here, scalloping, that was when they were going to Alaska. Heh. Two – two, three thousand pounds, that was all they could get... fish have tails, and they can swim away...

MR: Mmm hmm.

KB: That's right.

OE: And, fish they take very, very little. Now you have global warming. I don't know how severe that is, or what it is, only what I read in the paper and get in the news.

KB: Mmm.

OE: There's controversy about that too.

MR: Yeah.

OE: Some people say there is no pollution.

MR: Well, it's interesting the discussion about, is there fish or no fish? I just know from interviewing people who argue one side or the other, but my favorite answer was, somebody said, you know, fish don't keep appointments.

KB: (laughs)

OE: Nope!

MR: You know, they're not out there July tenth every year...

OE: No, no, no, no, no.

MR: ...when they go out to be counted, and... and I think fishermen who've been out fishing and their families been fishing for generations kind of pass on that knowledge, knowing that things change, the weather change – the weather's always changed, the seas have always changed...

OE: Well, we definitely have a different weather now.

MR: Yes.

OE: The fish... the plankton and things, is very, very sensitive... but then you have another bad thing here now. And that is that big fish buyers.

MR: Mmm...

OE: They own boats now, there's some fish buyers, they own twenty boats. And that could own the fleet too. Because the fish buyer, he not, is not necessarily going to give high price for the fish because he'll get it the other end.

KB: Mmm...

OE: That's something they don't know. And there's some fish buyers are bad. I – see, I've talked to a lot of guys, young guys. And there was one fish house where they took out fish and they come in at night. That's corruption on this waterfront, and I think it's worse now than ever.

MR: Mmm...

OE: They ask him, "Well what do you want? You want cocaine, or you want... what do you want? Let's send for some girls to come down." Cause they were going to take out there in the morning, at that fish house. So, it's a dark side.

MR: Mmm...

OE: The drug. That's the real dark side in New Bedford. And I don't know what they gonna do about it. [30:25]

MR: Did you ever pull up anything unexpected?

OE: An airplane...

KB: Huh!

OE: ...with two guys in.

KB: No!

OE: Oh yes.

MR: Where was that?

OE: Off Nantucket airport.

KB: No kidding! I never knew that.

OE: Yup!

KB: Whew!

OE: Small. [Piper crop?]

KB: Were they alive?

OE: No, no, no, no, no.

MR: How long did – how long had they been...

OE: Oh, probably a week. But they were already...

KB: Ohh!

OE: ...decomposing.

MR: Yeah.

OE: Badly.

KB: Ooh... Ooohhh... Ooh, that must have been awful. Wow.

MR: Well that's the biggest thing I've heard anybody...

KB: Mmm!

MR: ...mention. Wow.

KB: Wow is right.

OE: But then they talk about sea turtles. That's a big thing about sea turtles. All the years I've fishing. I've only seen one sea turtle.

KB: I know, that's what [Reyda?] says and everybody else too. I know.

OE: I only seen one sea turtle.

KB: (laughs)

OE: But then there used to be a lot of sharks. There used to be so many sharks you couldn't fish. They bite they cod end.

KB: Oh, no kidding!

OE: And we even put scallop rings and they got in.

KB: Really!

OE: Oh yeah, when you're hauled back there are big brown dogs. There was sharks as big as this room here, and they come up, and...

MR: Wow!

OE: Bit the net, and ate the fish.

KB: Oh!

OE: But you don't have them anymore.

KB: Yeah, see one compensates, yeah...

OE: You know, there's no sharks anymore.

KB: Mmm.

MR: Yeah, I've never heard anyone mention...

OE: See, that time when I was swordfishing, we got a lot of herring shark. What the hell else do you call them here? They're [hallblack?] in Norsk. What the hell is it you call 'em? They sell em in the store now, they taste just as good as swordfish.

KB: Oh... yeah, what is that? Yeah, I can't think. It begin with an M?

OE: Maybe.

MR: Monkfish?

KB: No.

OE: No, no, not monkfish.

MR: Malumai? Mahi mahi.

KB: That's what I'm thinking of, yeah.

MR: Mahi mahi?

OE: No, no, that's Hawaiian fish.

MR: Oh, yeah, okay.

OE: Ha. But anyway we got so many of them. There was no market here for them at that time. Nowadays. But then, there was a Norwegian fleet came over here, sharkfishing. They took their sharks to Las Palmas, the Canaries.

MR: Mmm...

OE: Do you remember when all these Norwegian boats came in here sharkfishing?

KB: No.

OE: Oh yeah, they were full of them.

KB: Really?

OE: So, the Larsens, they from Norway too, over on Menemsha. We had a big boatload of them. We went alongside the Norwegian boat, and the swordfish, they couldn't sell them. So we exchanged for swordfish, and... heh heh.

KB: Aah!

OE: Yes.

KB: For heaven sakes.

OE: But, there is no swordfish now, they go all the way up to Flemish Cap. That's two hundred miles off New Foundland.

KB: Mmm...

OE: They go up there for – to swordfish. But... they've been in their holds a long time. There's no taste or nothing to them.

KB: Mmm...

OE: No. [34:19]

MR: What are some of your best memories of fishing?

OE: Well, that's probably... well... I really don't have any real bad memories. Like I said you really lived good, and it was a very free life. And you come in, you had your days ashore, and them days you never went out on a Sunday or anything.

KB: Right... mmm...

OE: It was different story, or this was firstly one of the best places in the world here to fish.

KB: Mmm...

MR: Mmm...

OE: So you...

KB: Yup...

MR: Is there anything you wanted to ask?

KB: No, I'm just wondering if there's anything else that you got up besides that plane, and, I don't know...

OE: No...

MR: If...

KB: Never got torpedoes?

MR: ...that's hard to top.

KB: No torpedoes, or...?

OE: No.

KB: No?

MR: Mmm...

KB: Mmm... that's something though. Whooph. Mmm...

OE: Yeah.

MR: So you're still keeping busy making nets...

OE: No.

MR: ...and doing those sorts of things?

OE: No, no. I just tying knots and make things for boaters...

MR: Okay.

OE: ...you know.

KB: That's nice.

OE: But I got enough work in the house, you know, and the boat.

KB: Mmm.

OE: My boat is hauled out now.

MR: I was going to ask you, your boat...

OE: It's in a boatyard down the South end of New Bedford.

KB: How big is your boat?

OE: Twenty-eight feet.

KB: Twenty-eight feet... wow.

MR: Hmm.

OE: Right behind me you can see this picture there.

MR: What's the name of it?

OE: [Torfast?]. It's named after the dog. I had a – I always had dog.

KB: Okay

OE: Dogs in Denmark, they all named Torfast out in the farms, yes.

MR: Aah!

KB: Oh, really, oh, that's cute.

MR: Torfast, that means fateful.

KB: Aww, isn't that nice. T-O-R? Torfast?

OE: Yeah, Torfast. That's... see the dog there?

MR: Yes.

KB: Aww, yeah...

MR: So you would take your dog out with you?

OE: Oh yeah, he was on the boat all the time.

MR: Did anybody ever take a cat?

OE: Yeah, I think cats and motorboats...

KB: Anybody br-bring animals out fishing?

OE: I never been on a boat with animals, fish...

KB: No, no... never thought about it.

OE: No, that wouldn't – that wouldn't be a good place for an animal.

KB: No, no...

MR: I know a lot of the shellfishermen in Narragansett take their dogs...

OE: Yeah, well that's a...well they're going in every night, they don't...

MR: Yeah, yeah right, exactly...

KB: Yeah, yeah, that's the big difference

OE: That's the, but, the...

MR: Yeah.

OE: That wouldn't be a good place for a dog, you know...

KB: No.

OE: ...offshore fishing boat...

KB: No, no, no... no. (laughs) [37:45]

MR: Hmm! Well is there anything else that you'd like to add that we haven't th... thought of?

OE: No, not really, because... like I said, right now I don't – I only know what I read in the paper, and... Carl comes over and talks to me every once in a while.

KB: Carl Bendiksen?

OE: No... yeah, I know Carl too.

KB: But Carl who?

OE: Carl, that little Italian who skipper on your boat.

KB: Oh! Carl Corral.

OE: Yeah, and he brings me fish now. He was with me for quite awhile.

KB: Oh yeah.

OE: Other than that I don't – if I go down the dock I don't know anybody.

KB: No, no...

OE: No.

KB: No... no.

MR: Hmm.

KB: It's changed.

OE: It is.

KB: Mmm.

MR: Yeah, that's why we like to get the stories of... the older days and what's going on now. We've been – this year in particular we interviewed a lot of younger fishermen, and um, as the weekend – over time, the differences, the – the technology is different, the boats are different, the, um, make-up of the crews are different, the experiences are very different.

OE: Yeah...

KB: Mmm... [39:15]

OE: You see, just – when I was fishing, special these Norwegian, where there was Norwegians, there was a lot of them cooks, you know, they had been to cooking school in Norway. And they would cook in the merchant marine, and they could really cook. They had skills. And there was also some of the mates and skippers there, that had license for big ship there – there was a lot of skill...

KB: Mmm... mmm...

OE: ...what you don't see today.

KB: No...you're right. It's true.

OE: Like your husband now, that's really tremendous what he have done, I drive by, I see the nets and things he make, it's unbelievable.

KB: Mmm... mmm... mmm hmm.

OE: It's really some – something.

KB: Yeah... yeah... yup. That was a struggle, cause he started it when the fishing was going down...

OE: Yeah, I would...

KB: ...in '87.

OE: ...I bought stuff from – I've been out to your house in Dartmouth.

KB: Mmm hmm. When he first started then, yeah.

OE: Yeah, yeah. He was in the garage.

KB: In the garage, yup.

OE: Do Levine ever talk to you...?

KB: (laughs) Isn't that cute. They say hello.

OE: Yeah.

KB: (laughs) Yeah. Yeah, yeah.

OE: Well, Levine don't have to worry. He – I don't think he's worried.

KB: No, no. They're not growing.

OE: No.

KB: You know, they just – status quo. Mmm...

OE: Yes. But I don't think they interest in growing.

KB: No, no...

OE: No.

KB: Mmm hmm. Well...

OE: Then there's... that Leif Jacobsen. He started that... Euro. That's down where I have my boat.

KB: Mmm hmm.

OE: I don't know if they're doing much.

KB: No, I don't either. But that's down there, yeah. So that's where you keep your boat?...

OE: South End.

KB: Oh, that Euro Products down there, that's where you have your boat, right.

OE: Yeah.

KB: Mmm. Yeah I don't know how much they're doing either.

OE: I see they had a truck there, Swan Net, that's from Ireland.

KB: Mmm Hmm.

OE: Midwater nets.

KB: Yup, yup. Swan Net. Yup, yup... Yeah...

OE: Then there's the [I and P?]. Are they big?

KB: They're pretty big. They're a Canadian company.

OE: Yes.

KB: So they have their headquarters in Canada.

OE: Yup. [I and P?]

KB: Yeah...

OE: Then the New Bedford Ship Supply, do they... they still at it, right?

KB: Yup, yup... yup... yup... yup... all of them.

MR: Yeah, even thinking of the differences between shore support gear manufacturers from early days to now has got to be really different.

OE: Well it was more simple.

MR: Mmmm...

OE: When I started, you know, there was no nylon, either.

MR: Oh, right.

OE: Wooden rollers then.

OE: No net drums, nothing.

KB: That's right, over the side, yeah.

OE: Side rigs.

OE: Oh yeah.

KB: Mmm...[42:36]

OE: See, the fish has more of a chance. Today they don't have a chance.

KB: Yeah.

OE: No.

KB: Yeah.

OE: And now, I also hear this, they throwing codfish overboard.

KB: Yeah.

OE: See, the law is not right.

KB: No, its not.

OE: That's waste.

KB: That's waste is right.

OE: So that's no good.

KB: No, no, that's right.

OE: Maybe they should come down to a quota – take everything.

KB: That's what I've said right along.

OE: Take everything.

KB: You know, you're allowed so much a year, and however you want to get it.

OE: Yup.

KB: You want to fish all year or you want to fish for three months, just your quota.

OE: But see the thing is, there's actually too many boats I think, too.

KB: Mmm...

OE: There's too many boats. That's – that's the whole trouble.

KB: Yeah...

OE: But, that's the way things are, that's mans greed, see, one makes money, well then another one wanna make money too.

MR: Mmm hmm...

OE: See, it's hard. It's hard.

KB: That's right. It's a whole different business.

OE: But, ah, it should would be a blow to New Bedford if things really went bad.

MR: Oh yes.

OE: No question about it.

MR: Well, if we don't have anything else right now we can say thank you very much, and we'll turn off the tape recorder, and...

OE: Well, any time.

MR: Any time, well, I'm sure well think of more things and we'll probably...

OE: Okay.

MR: ..reel you in for something else later on. [laughs] Okay. [44:19]
